| Teaching Methods     | The discipline "Contemporary History of Uzbekistan" is taught through interactive lectures, problem-based learning, seminars, group discussions, debates, and project work. Students analyze historical processes using statistical data, periodicals, and official sources, developing critical thinking and research skills, while digital resources—e-libraries, statistical databases, and multimedia—strengthen their ability to objectively evaluate historical events and apply modern historiographical approaches.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

|  | Student performance is assessed through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final written examination (50%). Students may score a maximum of 20 points for the current assessment in semester. Students obtain 12 points of the allocated 20 points through participation in practical classes, and 8 points through independent work carried out under the supervision of the instructor. Students may earn a maximum of 1.3 points for each practical class. Based on their preparation for the seminar questions and participation in discussions, students are assessed up to 0.8 points per class, with a total of 12.0 points available (15 classes <math>\times</math> 0.8 points = 12.0 points). For each Teacher Guided Independent Work (TGIW) task in practical lessons, students may receive up to 0.5 points, with a total of 7.5 points (15 TGIW tasks <math>\times</math> 0.5 points = 7.5 points). An additional 0.5 point is awarded for the task of the 15th practical lesson, bringing the total to 8.0 points. The midterm assessment is conducted after all lecture sessions for the Module have been completed. It is based on: A test covering all topics studied in lectures, worth a maximum of 20 points. Independent work: Students are assigned specific topics to prepare a report (essay) and upload it to the HEMIS platform by the specified deadline. Submissions not uploaded on time will not be accepted. Independent work is worth a maximum of 10 points. In total, a student can earn 30 points in the midterm assessment. The final assessment may be conducted in written exam or testing format: Written exam format: Students receive 5 questions: 2 from lecture topics and 3 from |

| Module objective         | The objective of the Applied Mathematics 1 module is to introduce students to the necessary set of mathematical information – concepts, assertions and their proofs, and methods for solving practical problems – and to the interrelationships between branches of mathematics, and to teach them to apply theoretical knowledge directly to practice, draw correct conclusions and make sound decisions.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            |

| Teaching Methods     | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, practical exercises, and independent analytical work. Independent work is carried out in various forms, including writing essays and lecture outlines on given topics, preparing lecture materials, compiling glossaries, completing case assignments, working with information and analytical materials, translating sources, creating infographics, preparing conference abstracts, and developing multimedia presentations.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student learning is assessed through tests, oral work, and written work. In line with the standard structure, performance is evaluated through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final examination (50%). The continuous assessment evaluates active participation in lectures and practical lessons, seminar discussions, and the completion of independent work such as essays, glossaries, case assignments, infographics, and multimedia presentations on the topics of the course. The midterm assessment consists of written and oral tests together with the evaluation of structured independent study projects. The final examination is a comprehensive test of the theoretical and practical mastery of the course, covering matrices, determinants and the rank of a matrix, systems of linear equations, linear space and complex numbers, vector algebra and analytical geometry, the limit and continuity of a function, the derivative and differential calculus, and the definite integral. Successful completion of all assigned independent study tasks is a prerequisite for taking the final examination. Grading criteria and assessment scale: |

| Teaching Methods     | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, practical exercises, and independent analytical work. Independent work is carried out in various forms, including writing essays and lecture outlines on given topics, preparing lecture materials, compiling glossaries, completing case assignments, working with information and analytical materials, translating sources, creating infographics, preparing conference abstracts, and developing multimedia presentations.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                     |
| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student learning is assessed through tests, oral work, and written work. In line with the standard structure, performance is evaluated through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final examination (50%). The continuous assessment evaluates active participation in lectures and practical lessons, seminar discussions, and the completion of independent work such as essays, glossaries, case assignments, infographics, and multimedia presentations on the topics of the course. The midterm assessment consists of written and oral tests together with the evaluation of structured independent study projects. The final examination is a comprehensive test of the theoretical and practical mastery of the course, covering definite and improper integrals, functions of several variables and their differentials, numerical and functional series, first-order and higher-order differential |

| Module objective         | The objective of the Economic Theory course is to provide students with theoretical foundations of economic knowledge, key concepts and categories of economics, economic laws and principles, and to develop their ability to apply these knowledge and principles in practice. The course forms a systematic understanding of micro- and macroeconomic processes, the functioning of markets, the role of the state, and the place of the national economy in the global economic system.                 |
| Module Learning Outcomes | Knowledge:LO1. Demonstrate knowledge and understanding of core economic concepts, theories, and terminology; identify the laws of functioning and development of the national economy and explain the processes of production, distribution, exchange, and consumption.LO2. Analyze, organize, and interpret economic phenomena and processes; identify interrelationships and apply methods of economic analysis using written, numerical, diagrammatic, and graphical forms. |

These include preparation of analytical essays, calculation of key economic indicators, graphical analysis of demand and supply, analysis of macroeconomic indicators of Uzbekistan, and discussion of current economic problems. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short in-class quizzes, and the evaluation of structured independent study projects. Key projects include comparative analysis of different economic systems, calculation and interpretation of GDP and other national accounts indicators, analysis of unemployment and inflation in Uzbekistan, an essay on the role of the state in the economy, and a report on Uzbekistan's integration into the world economy. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive final written examination consisting of theoretical questions and practical problem-solving tasks (e.g., analyzing market equilibrium, calculating production costs and profits, determining macroeconomic equilibrium, evaluating fiscal and monetary policy instruments, and assessing the impact of economic growth factors). It is designed to evaluate students' mastery of economic theory principles, analytical skills, and ability to apply theoretical knowledge to real-world economic situations at micro and macro levels. Successful completion and submission of all assigned independent study tasks is a mandatory prerequisite for taking the final exam. Grading criteria and assessment scale: |

| Module objective         | The primary goal of learning a foreign language is to prepare future specialists who can use one or more foreign languages effectively and confidently in their daily lives, academic pursuits, and professional activities. At the same time, it aims to foster a sense of patriotism, develop learners' abilities for independent research, and encourage the continuous improvement of their knowledge and skills beyond the classroom and even after graduation from higher education institutions. Furthermore, it seeks to enhance their logical thinking skills and their ability to discuss and analyze universal as well as field-specific scientific topics. |

| Content | Practical lessons:P1. Teaching formation exercises – To develop discipline, attention, and teamwork skills among students by practically teaching the basic methods of standing in formation, turns, alignment, positioning in rows, and formation rules.P2. Repetition of formation exercises – To conduct repeated exercises in order to bring previously learned formation commands (turning right, left, backward, and movement techniques) to the level of accuracy and automatism.P3. Teaching general developmental exercises (GDE) – To teach exercises performed with and without equipment that warm up muscles and joints, improve correct posture, and develop general movement coordination.P4. Repetition of general developmental exercises – To prepare the body for more intensive physical loads by repeating exercise complexes aimed at improving flexibility and strength.P5. Teaching basic acrobatic exercises – To teach elements such as forward and backward rolls, bridge formation, and headstand while following safety rules to develop balance, agility, and flexibility.P6. Repetition of basic acrobatic exercises – To improve the quality and sequence of acrobatic movements, overcome fear, and strengthen movement coordination skills.P7. Teaching strength-developing exercises using gymnastic equipment – To teach strength exercises on horizontal bars, parallel bars, and gymnastic walls aimed at developing arm, shoulder, and abdominal muscles (pull-ups, support lifts). |

| Teaching Methods     | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, inquiry-based and problem-based learning, seminars, group discussions, and project-based activities. Independent learning and digital educational resources further promote critical thinking, scientific communication, and the application of modern philosophical concepts.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |

| Module objective         | The objective of the Statistics course is to develop in students in-depth professional knowledge and necessary academic skills in the field of statistical methods and practices. The course focuses on mastering the subject and methods of statistics, statistical observation, summarization and grouping, calculation of averages and variation indicators, sample observation, correlation-regression analysis, dynamics series, economic indices, the System of National Accounts, as well as the application of statistical methods in analyzing population, labor market, national wealth, foreign economic activity, financial system and living standards.               |
| Module Learning Outcomes | Knowledge: LO1. Understand the subject of statistics, its specific characteristics, mass phenomena and their important features. LO2. Master statistical methods, stages of statistical research and the principles of organizing statistical observation. LO3. Know the current state of statistics in the Republic of Uzbekistan and international statistical practice. LO4. Understand the nature and importance of statistical observation and the principles of its organization. LO5. Calculate variation indicators, asymmetry coefficient and quantitatively assess distributional kurtosis. |

| Teaching Methods     | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, practical exercises, independent analytical assignments, problem-solving tasks, case studies, group discussions and the use of modern statistical tools. Lectures are conducted using multimedia presentations and real statistical data examples. Practical lessons include hands-on calculation of statistical indicators, construction of tables and graphs, correlation-regression analysis and interpretation of economic indices. Independent work focuses on analytical reports, solving statistical problems, preparation of presentations and research on practical application of statistical methods in the economy of Uzbekistan. |

Key projects include correlation-regression analysis, dynamics series analysis, calculation of System of National Accounts indicators and analysis of population and labor market statistics. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive final written examination consisting of theoretical questions and practical problem-solving tasks (e.g., calculation of statistical indicators, variation analysis, sample observation, economic indices, SNA accounts and living standards indicators). It is designed to evaluate students' mastery of statistical methods, technical calculation skills and ability to apply statistical tools to real-world economic analysis. Successful completion and submission of all assigned independent study tasks is a mandatory prerequisite for taking the final exam. Grading criteria and assessment scale: Student academic achievement is evaluated based on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: Excellent (90–100 points / Grade 5): The student demonstrates a comprehensive, deep understanding of statistical theory and methods, maintains flawless scientific and logical rigor without conceptual errors, demonstrates independent analytical thinking in applying statistical tools, masters relevant calculation techniques, completes all independent assignments accurately and successfully solves complex statistical problems. |

| Teaching Methods | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, practical exercises, independent analytical assignments, problem-solving tasks, case studies, group discussions and graphical analysis of macroeconomic models. Lectures are conducted using multimedia presentations and real macroeconomic data of Uzbekistan and the world economy. Practical lessons include calculation of macroeconomic indicators, construction and analysis of AD-AS and IS-LM models, evaluation of fiscal and monetary policy instruments, and analysis of economic growth factors. Independent work focuses on analytical reports, comparative analysis of macroeconomic models, preparation of presentations and research on current macroeconomic problems of Uzbekistan.                                         |

| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student performance is assessed through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final written examination (50%). The continuous assessment (20%) evaluates active classroom participation, practical lesson performance, and the successful completion of foundational independent study assignments. These include calculation of macroeconomic indicators, analysis of AD-AS model, evaluation of unemployment and inflation, and discussion of fiscal and monetary policy instruments. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short in-class quizzes and the evaluation of structured independent study projects. Key projects include analysis of GDP structure of Uzbekistan, evaluation of anti-inflation policy, construction of the IS-LM model, and analysis of economic growth factors. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive final written examination consisting of theoretical questions and practical problem-solving tasks (e.g., calculation of GDP and related indicators, analysis of AD-AS and IS-LM models, evaluation of fiscal and monetary policy effectiveness, and assessment of economic growth models). It is designed to evaluate students' mastery of macroeconomic theory, analytical skills and ability to apply macroeconomic concepts to real-world economic situations. Successful completion and submission of all assigned independent study tasks is a mandatory prerequisite for taking the final exam. Grading criteria and assessment scale: |

| Teaching Methods | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, practical accounting exercises, case studies, problem-solving activities, seminar discussions, independent learning assignments, and computer-based accounting applications. Students develop practical skills                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |

| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight:Student performance is assessed through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final written examination (50%).The continuous assessment (20%) evaluates students' active participation in lectures and practical classes, performance in accounting exercises, seminar discussions, and the successful completion of independent study assignments. These activities include recording business transactions using the double-entry system, preparing journal entries and ledger accounts, classifying accounting accounts, preparing balance sheets, accounting for fixed assets, intangible assets, inventories, cash, labor and wages, and solving practical accounting problems related to business operations.The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short quizzes, and the evaluation of structured independent study assignments. Students are required to analyze accounting cases, prepare accounting records for business transactions, calculate depreciation and product costs, apply inventory valuation methods, prepare financial statements, and analyze financial results based on practical accounting scenarios. |

|  | The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive written examination consisting of theoretical questions and practical accounting problems. Students are expected to prepare journal entries, post transactions to ledger accounts, prepare a balance sheet and a financial results report, account for fixed and intangible assets, inventories, cash, labor costs, and production costs, and calculate the cost of manufacturing and agricultural products. The examination is designed to assess students' understanding of accounting principles, their ability to apply accounting methods in practice, and their competence in preparing and interpreting financial statements. Successful completion and submission of all required independent study assignments is a mandatory prerequisite for taking the final examination. Grading criteria and assessment scale:Student academic achievement is evaluated based on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: Excellent (90–100 points / Grade 5): The student demonstrates a comprehensive and in-depth understanding of accounting concepts, principles, methods, and the legal framework of accounting. The student accurately records business transactions using the double-entry system, prepares ledger accounts, balance sheets, and financial statements without conceptual or computational errors, correctly accounts for fixed assets, intangible assets, inventories, cash, labor, production costs, and financial results, and successfully applies accounting knowledge to practical business situations. All independent assignments are completed accurately and on time. Good (70–89.9 points / Grade 4): The student demonstrates a good understanding of accounting principles and practices, correctly |

|  | Reserve System: Examines the structural weaknesses of unregulated shadow banking and fractional-reserve systems in the early 20th century, illustrating how severe liquidity shortages and contagion effects demonstrated the imperative need for a central bank as a lender of last resort. L8. The Great Depression Era, 2 - Florida Housing Balance Sheet, FZT, and the Banking Crisis of 1931: Explores the systemic propagation of the Great Depression, examining how the collapse of regional real estate bubbles, balance sheet distress, Fed policy missteps, and international banking panics triggered a global financial contagion. L9. 2 - The Great Depression and the US banking crisis: Examines the structural vulnerabilities within the US banking sector during the 1930s, analyzing how bank runs, widespread insolvency, and monetary contraction deepened the Great Depression and transformed modern financial regulation. L10. 3 - Great Depression Wave - Germany, Eastern European Crises, Sterling Crisis of 1976: Analyzes the theoretical mechanisms of international financial contagion and currency instability, focusing on how sovereign debt vulnerabilities, hyperinflation pressures, and balance of payments crises affected European economies during the interwar era and the post-Bretton Woods period. L11. Financial crises of the 1990s: Examines the structural vulnerabilities associated with capital account liberalization, fixed exchange rate regimes, and short-term foreign debt, analyzing how speculative attacks and currency mismatches triggered severe emerging market contagions (e.g., the 1994 Tequila Crisis, the 1997 Asian Financial Crisis, and the 1998 Russian Default). |

| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student performance is assessed through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final written examination (50%). The continuous assessment (20%) evaluates active classroom participation, economic reasoning during seminar discussions, practical case study performance, and the successful completion of foundational independent study assignments. These tasks include real-time tracking and monitoring of systemic risk indicators, practical application of financial stability measures and financial leverage, calculation of liquidity coverage and capital adequacy, analysis of historical central bank balance sheet resources, and practical identification of early warning signals of market contagion. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short analytical quizzes, and the evaluation of structured independent research projects. It is designed to evaluate students' mastery of crisis transmission mechanisms, macro-financial stability principles, and quantitative risk management decision-making in volatile market environments. Successful completion and submission of all assigned independent study tasks is a mandatory prerequisite for taking the final examination. Grading criteria and assessment scale: Student academic achievement is evaluated based on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: Excellent (90–100 points / Grade 5): The student demonstrates a comprehensive, deep understanding of personal finance principles, maintains flawless scientific and logical rigor without conceptual errors, demonstrates independent analytical thinking, masters relevant financial laws and regulations, completes all independent assignments |

|  | The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, in-class quizzes, and evaluation of structured independent study projects. Key assignments include an analysis of the financial system and financial management practices in Uzbekistan, a comparative study of financial institutions and financial markets, evaluation of investment projects using capital budgeting techniques (NPV, IRR, Payback Period), bond and stock valuation analysis, assessment of insurance and risk management practices, and a research report on international finance and global financial trends. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive written examination consisting of theoretical questions and practical financial problem-solving tasks. The exam evaluates students' ability to apply financial concepts, including financial planning and control, state budget analysis, financial market evaluation, time value of money calculations, bond and stock valuation, cost of capital determination, capital budgeting decisions, dividend policy analysis, and working capital management. Successful completion and submission of all assigned independent study tasks is a mandatory prerequisite for taking the final examination. Grading criteria and assessment scale:Student academic achievement is evaluated based on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: Excellent (90–100 points / Grade 5): The student demonstrates a comprehensive and deep understanding of fundamental finance concepts, including financial systems, financial management, public finance, financial markets, investment decisions, risk management, and international finance. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short in-class quizzes, and the evaluation of structured independent study projects. Key projects include a comparative empirical study of commercial bank products (mortgages, consumer loans, and deposits), a 15-year financial modeling report comparing home purchase versus renting, an auto loan versus leasing cost-benefit analysis, a FinTech and digital asset risk assessment report, and an analytical essay on financial independence and early retirement (FIRE) strategies. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive final written examination consisting of theoretical questions and practical financial problem-solving tasks (e.g., calculating mortgage amortization schedules, compound interest growth, insurance premium deductions, and pension fund yields). It is designed to evaluate students' mastery of personal finance principles, quantitative decision-making skills, and ability to navigate digital financial ecosystems. Successful completion and submission of all assigned independent study tasks is a mandatory prerequisite for taking the final exam. Grading criteria and assessment scale:Student academic achievement is evaluated based on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: Excellent (90–100 points / Grade 5): The student demonstrates a comprehensive, deep understanding of personal finance principles, maintains flawless scientific and logical rigor without conceptual errors, demonstrates |

| Teaching Methods     | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, practical exercises, and independent analytical work. Independent work is carried out in various forms, including writing essays and lecture outlines on given topics, preparing lecture materials, compiling glossaries, completing case assignments, working with information and analytical materials, translating sources, creating infographics, preparing conference abstracts, and developing multimedia presentations.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

The continuous assessment evaluates active participation in lectures and practical lessons, seminar discussions, and the completion of independent work such as essays, glossaries, case assignments, infographics, and multimedia presentations on the topics of the course. The midterm assessment consists of written and oral tests together with the evaluation of structured independent study projects. The final examination is a comprehensive test of the theoretical and practical mastery of the course, covering the fundamentals and information support of econometric modeling, probability theory and mathematical statistics in econometrics, pairwise and multivariate correlation and regression analysis, nonlinear regression and dummy variables, the quality assessment of econometric models, time-series models, systems of simultaneous equations, and applied and dynamic econometric models. Successful completion of all assigned independent study tasks is a prerequisite for taking the final examination. Grading criteria and assessment scale: Student academic achievement is evaluated on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: Excellent (90–100 points / Grade 5): The student can fully explain the essence and content of the subject, maintains scientific rigor and logic while avoiding errors and confusion, has a clear understanding of the theoretical and practical significance of the subject materials, demonstrates independent thinking, answers questions clearly and concisely, carefully prepares outlines, completes all independent assignments fully and accurately, fully masters |

| Module objective         | The objective of the Portfolio Theory and Financial Markets module is to equip students with the quantitative capabilities, analytical tools, and theoretical frameworks necessary to construct, optimize, and evaluate investment portfolios, analyze security pricing, and navigate FinTech innovations (such as algorithmic trading and Robo-advisors) within modern financial ecosystems.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                   |

| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student performance is assessed through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final written examination (50%). The continuous assessment (20%) evaluates active classroom participation, seminar discussions, practical problem-solving tasks, and the completion of foundational independent assignments. These include time value of money calculations, initial stock/bond valuation exercises, computing portfolio risk-return metrics, and preliminary CAPM Beta estimations. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short in-class quizzes, and structured analytical projects. Projects include Markowitz portfolio optimization modeling, Black-Scholes option pricing simulations, an empirical report on FinTech/Robo-advisory platform performance, and comparative fund benchmark analysis. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive written examination consisting of theoretical questions and complex portfolio management problem-solving tasks (e.g., multi-asset portfolio rebalancing, factor model pricing, bond portfolio immunization, and performance attribution calculations). Successful completion and submission of all assigned independent study tasks is a mandatory prerequisite for taking the final exam. Grading criteria and assessment scale: |

Using language effectively when writing your first research paper. They get familiar with following the norms of literary language, the principles of scientific style, and the requirements of speech culture while writing their first scientific research. They also develop skills in using language tools correctly and appropriately in scientific texts and expressing ideas clearly, logically, and smoothly. |
| Teaching Methods | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, communicative, and learner-centered teaching methods aimed at developing                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |

| Module objective         | The primary objective is to develop students' written and oral communication culture, stylistic competence, and communication skills necessary for effective and successful communication in their professional lives. This subject not only enhances students' knowledge acquired throughout the educational process but also provides a solid foundation for them to find their place in professional life and become successful specialists. Furthermore, it aims to enable students to apply their linguistic knowledge, skills, and competencies effectively in practice throughout their future professional careers in the fields they choose in accordance with their specialization. The module is designed to foster students' ability to think independently and express their ideas freely, clearly, and appropriately in a culturally and professionally acceptable manner within their professional fields. In addition, the study guide plays an important role in developing and improving each individual's speech and communication skills. |

| Prerequisites          | Students are expected to have basic knowledge of the Uzbek language and literature, general linguistics, speech culture, and stylistics, as well as fundamental skills in oral and written communication and the use of information and communication technologies (ICT).                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                |
| Exams and Assessment   | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student performance is assessed through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final written examination (50%). The continuous assessment (20%) evaluates classroom participation, laboratory performance, telescope observation activities, seminar presentations, and the successful completion of independent study assignments, including night sky observations, determination of local astronomical time, Moon phase observations, telescope model construction, and solar activity analysis. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written assignments, short in-class quizzes, and the evaluation of independent study projects, such as an observatory visit report, a stellar evolution diagram, a video presentation on a current astronomy topic, a Mars mission proposal, and an essay on a cosmological topic. The final assessment (50%) is a written examination consisting of theoretical questions and problem-solving tasks designed to assess students' understanding of astronomy and astrophysics, analytical skills, and their ability to apply scientific principles. Successful completion of all independent study assignments is required as an essential component of the module assessment. |

The practical component includes a practical analysis of successful and unsuccessful "green" reforms in selected countries (for example, Germany, South Korea and China), with students working in groups to present a "green" transformation strategy for the selected country. The final component focuses on the capabilities of Uzbekistan, taking into account the country's existing potential - solar and wind energy resources, the "green" development goals set out in the "Uzbekistan-2030" strategy, and cooperation projects with international financial institutions - after which students will develop practical proposals, for example, a short project concept for the "green" transformation of a specific sector of the economy. P2. Climate change and ecological adaptation to it. This practical seminar explores the fundamentals of the Earth's climate system, focusing on solar radiation, the Earth's heat balance, and the greenhouse effect. Students will perform basic heat balance calculations and explore the causes and consequences of climate change. The workshop will also examine ecological adaptation measures such as climate-resilient agriculture, water resources management, and sustainable urban development, with an emphasis on relevant solutions for Uzbekistan. P3. The concept of enhancing the ecological culture of the population in Uzbekistan by 2030. This practical seminar introduces Uzbekistan's environmental policy and the importance of environmental awareness and culture for sustainable development. Students examine environmental education, public participation, and the role of the media, and develop practical recommendations to strengthen environmental culture in Uzbekistan. |

|  | P4. Effective use of water resources. This practical seminar introduces the challenges of water resource management, including water scarcity, climate change, irrigation efficiency, and transboundary water issues. Students explore water-saving technologies, integrated water resource management, and international best practices, and develop practical recommendations for improving water-use efficiency in Uzbekistan. P5. The waste problem, recycling, and waste-free technologies. This practical seminar introduces the challenges of waste generation and management, including household, industrial, and hazardous waste, as well as their environmental impacts. Students explore recycling technologies, the principles of reduce, reuse, and recycle, the circular economy, and waste-free production, and develop practical recommendations for improving waste management in Uzbekistan. P6. Sustainable development goals in Uzbekistan. This practical seminar introduces the implementation of the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) in Uzbekistan. Students examine the national framework for SDG implementation, its integration into the "Uzbekistan–2030" Strategy, progress in key areas, and the role of partnerships. Using official data, they analyze selected SDG indicators and develop practical recommendations for achieving the SDGs in Uzbekistan. P7. International cooperation in environmental protection. International Environmental Cooperation. This practical seminar introduces the principles and mechanisms of international environmental cooperation. Students examine the role of international organizations, environmental agreements, financing mechanisms, and regional cooperation on environmental issues. They also analyze case studies and develop practical recommendations for strengthening Uzbekistan's participation in international environmental initiatives. Self-Assignments: SA1. The development of ecology as a science in Uzbekistan. This independent work helps students understand the development of ecological science in Uzbekistan. Students will study its historical development, the contribution of major scientists and institutions, key environmental challenges (such as the Aral Sea crisis, desertification, and biodiversity conservation), the system of ecological education and research, and current trends, including climate change and sustainable development. SA2. Environmental problems and ways to prevent them. This independent work helps students understand different ecological problems and methods for their prevention. Students will study the classification and causes of environmental problems, major forms of environmental degradation, economic and social factors affecting the environment, preventive measures and environmental protection tools, as well as national and |

|  | international experiences in solving ecological issues, with special attention to Uzbekistan and Central Asia SA3. Habitats of living organisms and their adaptation to the environment. This independent work helps students understand the relationship between organisms and their habitats. Students will study the types of habitats, abiotic and biotic environmental factors, the concepts of habitat and ecological niche, mechanisms of organism adaptation, the role of natural selection, and examples of species adapted to the desert, steppe, and mountain ecosystems of Uzbekistan and Central Asia. SA4. Mechanisms of the impact of various ecological factors on living organisms. This independent work helps students understand the effects of ecological factors on living organisms. Students will study the classification of ecological factors (abiotic, biotic, and anthropogenic), the concepts of limiting factors and tolerance ranges, the differences between eurybiont and stenobiont organisms, physiological and behavioral adaptations to environmental conditions, and the combined effects of multiple ecological factors on organisms and ecosystems. SA5. Human demography and environmental protection. This independent work helps students understand the relationship between population growth and the environment. Students will study demographic trends, theories linking population and environmental impact, the effects of population growth on natural resources and ecosystems, the role of population policies in sustainable development, and the demographic and environmental situation in Uzbekistan. SA6. The concept of noosphere and environmental protection. This independent |

|  | work helps students understand the concept of the noosphere and its importance in modern environmental science. Students will study the origins and development of the noosphere concept, its main principles, its relationship with sustainable development, its ethical and practical significance for environmental policy and education, and its application to current environmental challenges such as climate change and biodiversity conservation. SA7. Mining, chemical, metallurgy industries and environmental protection. This independent work helps students understand the environmental impacts of the mining, chemical, and metallurgical industries. Students will study the main sources of pollution, environmental risks, methods for reducing industrial impacts, environmental regulations and cleaner production technologies, as well as the current environmental challenges and modernization efforts in these industries in Uzbekistan. SA8. Climate change and ecological adaptation. This independent work helps students understand the causes and impacts of climate change and the importance of ecological adaptation. Students will study the greenhouse effect, climate change impacts on ecosystems, the difference between mitigation and adaptation, ecosystem-based adaptation strategies, and the main climate challenges and adaptation priorities of Uzbekistan and Central Asia. SA9. The current state of water basins in Uzbekistan. Water issues in the region and ways to prevent them. This independent work helps students understand the condition and management of water resources in Uzbekistan and Central Asia. Students will study water sources, the Aral Sea crisis, regional water problems, legal and institutional management |

Desertification, desertification issues, and environmental protection. This independent work focuses on soil salinization and desertification, their causes, impacts, and prevention methods. Students will study environmental challenges in Uzbekistan and the Aral Sea region, along with solutions such as land restoration, improved irrigation, and sustainable land management. SA11. The role of plants and animals in the biosphere. The flora and fauna of Uzbekistan and their conservation. This independent work assignment is designed to deepen students' understanding of the ecological functions performed by plants and animals within the biosphere, and of the specific conservation challenges facing the flora and fauna of Uzbekistan, complementing the theoretical material covered in lectures. Students are required to independently study the following: the fundamental ecological roles of plants and animals in the biosphere, including the role of plants as primary producers in energy flow and biogeochemical cycles (carbon, oxygen, and nitrogen cycles), and the role of animals in nutrient cycling, pollination, seed dispersal, and the regulation of ecosystem balance through trophic relationships; the concept of biodiversity and its significance for ecosystem stability and resilience; the composition and characteristics of Uzbekistan's flora and fauna, including the diversity of ecosystems represented (desert, steppe, mountain, and wetland habitats) and species endemic to or characteristic of the region; the main threats to flora and fauna in Uzbekistan, such as habitat loss, overexploitation, poaching, and the impacts of climate change and |

The "Red Book" of the Republic of Uzbekistan and its role in environmental protection. This independent work helps students understand the Red Book of Uzbekistan as a tool for biodiversity conservation. Students will study its history, structure, species classification, legal importance, examples of endangered plants and animals, and conservation measures such as habitat protection and species restoration programs. SA13. Protected natural areas in the Republic of Uzbekistan and their role in environmental protection. This independent work helps students understand the role of specially protected natural areas in biodiversity conservation in Uzbekistan. Students will study types of protected areas, their ecological functions, legal framework, current challenges, and the importance of conservation, research, and international cooperation. SA14. Achieving sustainable development goals. This independent work helps students understand the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and their implementation. Students will study the 17 SDGs, monitoring methods, connections between goals, global challenges, and Uzbekistan's progress and priorities in achieving sustainable development. SA15. | Teaching Methods     | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, case study analysis, problem-based and project-based learning, visits to protected areas and environmental sites, laboratory and GIS-based environmental assessments, workshops, group discussions, and role-play simulations of policy negotiations. Students will analyze environmental and socio-economic data using statistical and mapping software and develop analytical, policy assessment, and research skills. Independent learning, guest lectures by environmental experts, and digital learning resources further develop critical thinking, sustainability literacy, and the practical application of green economy and environmental policy concepts to real-world challenges in Uzbekistan and the wider region. |

|  | The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written assignments, short in-class quizzes, and the evaluation of independent study projects, such as a report on the current state of a specific water body or protected natural area, an analysis of a Red Book species and its conservation status, a policy brief on Uzbekistan's progress toward the Sustainable Development Goals, and an essay on the concept of the green economy or the noosphere. The final assessment (50%) is a written examination consisting of theoretical questions and problem-solving tasks designed to assess students' understanding of environmental economics and ecological principles, analytical skills, and their ability to apply green development concepts to real-world policy challenges. Successful completion of all independent study assignments is required as an essential component of the module assessment. Grading criteria and assessment scale: Student academic achievement is evaluated based on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: Excellent (90–100 points / Grade 5): The student demonstrates a deep understanding of environmental protection, green development principles, sustainable resource management, climate change, biodiversity conservation, and environmental governance. The student completes independent assignments with a scientific approach, analyzes environmental problems, suggests effective green solutions and technologies, and provides well-structured, independent conclusions based on national and international environmental practices. Good (70–89.9 points / Grade 4): The student has a good understanding of the main |

|                        | concepts and principles of environmental protection and green development. The student can explain the causes and consequences of environmental problems, describe conservation measures, and discuss sustainable development approaches. Independent work is completed successfully, although some aspects of analysis and justification may need improvement. Average / Satisfactory (60–69.9 points / Grade 3): The student demonstrates basic knowledge of environmental protection and green development concepts. The student has a general understanding of environmental challenges, natural resource management, and sustainability issues but provides limited analysis and practical examples. Independent assignments meet the minimum requirements but lack depth and critical evaluation. Unsatisfactory (0–59.9 points / Grade 2): The student shows insufficient knowledge of the fundamental concepts of environmental protection and green development. The student cannot adequately explain environmental problems, their causes, consequences, or possible solutions. Independent assignments are incomplete or do not meet the required academic standards. |

Issues of sustainable development and environmental education. Sustainable Development Goals. Issues of developing environmental education in the Republic of Uzbekistan. Environmental protection, ecological culture, environmental education and upbringing, ecological enlightenment. Mechanisms for implementing ecological outreach. Forming and developing ecological knowledge, awareness, and culture among the rising younger generation, effectively organizing the process of environmental education and upbringing, and introducing innovative technologies into the field. Practical lessons: P1. Current environmental problems. This practical seminar focuses on major global and regional environmental problems, including climate change, biodiversity loss, deforestation, water pollution, the Aral Sea crisis, desertification, and waste management issues in Uzbekistan and Central Asia. Students analyze environmental challenges, evaluate response strategies, and develop solutions for specific ecological problems. The seminar aims to improve students' understanding of environmental issues, critical thinking, and problem-solving skills. P2. Interactions between nature and society. This practical seminar examines the relationship between human society and the natural environment. Students study the historical development of human impact on nature, theoretical approaches such as anthropocentrism and ecocentrism, and modern concepts including sustainable development and green economy. The seminar aims to develop students' ability to analyze |

Circulation of matter and energy in the biosphere. This practical seminar focuses on the circulation of matter and energy in the biosphere. Students study major biogeochemical cycles, energy flow through ecosystems, human impacts on these processes, and ecological consequences of their disruption. The seminar aims to develop students’ understanding of ecosystem functioning and their ability to analyze environmental changes. P4. Alternative energy sources and their ecological safety. This practical seminar focuses on alternative energy sources and their environmental safety compared with fossil fuels. Students study solar, wind, hydropower, geothermal, biomass, and hydrogen energy, analyze their advantages and environmental impacts, and evaluate their potential for sustainable energy development in Uzbekistan. The seminar develops students’ ability to assess energy technologies and propose environmentally friendly solutions. P5. The ecological problems of the Aral Sea and the Aral Sea region and their prevention. This practical seminar focuses on the causes, consequences, and solutions of the Aral Sea crisis in Central Asia. Students study the factors behind the sea’s decline, ecological and social impacts, restoration measures, water management strategies, and international cooperation efforts. The seminar develops students’ ability to analyze environmental crises and propose practical solutions for sustainable development. P6. Ecological problems and ways to prevent them. This topic examines major ecological problems at local, regional, and global levels. Students study pollution, climate change, biodiversity loss, and resource depletion issues. The topic also covers preventive measures, environmental protection strategies, and sustainable approaches to solving ecological challenges. SA3. Habitats of living organisms and their adaptation to the environment. This topic explores different types of habitats and their characteristics. Students study how organisms interact with environmental conditions and adapt to changes. Special attention is given to morphological, physiological, and behavioral adaptations of organisms living in various ecosystems. SA4. Mechanisms of the impact of various ecological factors on living organisms. This topic focuses on the influence of ecological factors on living organisms. Students analyze abiotic, biotic, and anthropogenic factors and their effects on organism development and survival. The role of adaptation mechanisms and ecological tolerance is also studied. SA5. Human demography and environmental protection. This topic examines the relationship between population growth and environmental changes. Students study the impact of urbanization, resource consumption, and human activities on ecosystems. The role of demographic policies and sustainable development approaches is also discussed. SA6. The concept of noosphere and environmental protection. This topic introduces the concept of the noosphere and its |

|  | importance in environmental science. Students study the ideas of V. Vernadsky and the relationship between human intelligence, scientific progress, and nature. The role of responsible human activity in protecting the environment is analyzed. SA7. Mining, chemical, metallurgy industries and environmental protection. This topic examines the environmental impacts of industrial activities. Students study pollution sources, waste generation, and ecological risks associated with mining, chemical, and metallurgical industries. Modern technologies and environmental protection measures are also considered. SA8. Climate change and ecological adaptation. This topic focuses on the causes and consequences of climate change. Students study greenhouse gases, global warming impacts, and changes in ecosystems. Adaptation and mitigation strategies for reducing climate risks are also analyzed. SA9. The current state of water bodies in Uzbekistan. Water issues in the region and measures to prevent them. This topic studies the condition of water resources in Uzbekistan and Central Asia. Students analyze rivers, lakes, groundwater resources, and the ecological consequences of the Aral Sea crisis. Sustainable water management and conservation methods are also discussed. SA10. Salinization, desertification issues, and environmental protection. This topic focuses on land degradation processes, including soil salinization and desertification. Students study their causes, environmental and economic consequences, especially in Uzbekistan and the Aral Sea region. Restoration methods and sustainable land management practices are considered. |

|  | SA11. The role of plants and animals in the biosphere. The flora and fauna of Uzbekistan and their conservation. This topic examines the importance of flora and fauna in maintaining ecosystem balance. Students study biodiversity, endangered species, and the ecological role of plants and animals. Conservation strategies for Uzbekistan's biological resources are also analyzed. SA12. The "Red Book" of the Republic of Uzbekistan and its role in environmental protection. This topic focuses on the importance of the Red Book in biodiversity conservation. Students study endangered species, their protection status, and conservation programs. The legal and ecological significance of the Red Book is also discussed. SA13. Protected natural areas in the Republic of Uzbekistan and their role in environmental protection. This topic examines specially protected natural areas and their ecological importance. Students study nature reserves, national parks, and protected ecosystems. The role of these areas in biodiversity conservation and scientific research is analyzed. SA14. Achieving sustainable development goals. This topic focuses on the United Nations Sustainable Development Goals and their environmental aspects. Students study sustainable development principles, global challenges, and strategies for achieving ecological balance. Uzbekistan's efforts toward SDG implementation are also considered. SA15. The importance of ecological education for sustainable development is also discussed.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  |
| Teaching Methods     | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, case-study analysis, problem-based and project-based learning, field visits to protected areas and environmental monitoring facilities, laboratory experiments and ecological data analysis, seminars, group discussions, and role-play simulations of environmental policy negotiation. Students analyze ecological and environmental data using specialized software and statistical tools, and develop observational, analytical, and research skills. Independent learning and digital educational resources further promote critical thinking, scientific communication, and the application of modern ecological and environmental protection concepts.                                                                 |

The student is able to apply theoretical knowledge to practical situations, although some analytical conclusions and examples may require further improvement. Average / Satisfactory (60–69.9 points / Grade 3): Students has basic knowledge of the main concepts and principles of ecology and environmental protection. The student can provide general explanations of ecological problems, natural resources, and environmental protection measures. However, independent analysis, scientific justification, and practical examples are limited. Unsatisfactory (0–59.9 points / Grade 2): Students demonstrates insufficient knowledge of the fundamental concepts of ecology and environmental protection. The student cannot clearly explain ecological processes, environmental problems, or their solutions. Independent assignments are incomplete or do not meet academic requirements, and the necessary knowledge and skills have not been developed. |

| Teaching Methods     | The module is based on interactive lectures, practical customs duties and taxes calculation exercises, case studies, problem-solving exercises, and independent learning tasks. Students will learn customs legislation, procedures for transferring customs electronic control forms, concluding contracts in the application of customs work regimes, using types of declarations when passing through customs, and procedures for filing declarations. Customs officers will acquire practical skills such as studying the work of customs officers, preparing documents when going abroad to study, travel, and work as citizens, as well as paying taxes and duties.                                                                                                                                  |

| Module objective     | The primary objective of teaching this course is to explore the theoretical and practical knowledge regarding the financial relations of individuals. Within the scope of the course, concepts of personal finance, its functions, and the fundamentals of financial literacy and planning will be covered. Furthermore, issues related to financial decision-making, budgeting, and income/expense management will be analyzed. Systems of settlements and payments, savings and investments, lending, insurance, and taxation will be reviewed. Social protection programs for the population, financial risks, and personal financial security issues will also be studied. |

|  | assessment (30%) and final written exam (50%). The continuous assessment (20%) assesses active participation in the lesson, completion of practical lesson exercises, seminar discussions and successful completion of key independent learning tasks. These include using mobile AI applications, creating personal financial assets through them, participating in electronic trading, creating an investment account, analyzing credit card statements and payments, and practical identification of financial security threats. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short in-class quizzes and assessment of structured independent learning projects. Key projects include reports on the use of digital products (lending, deposits) in the banking sector, FinTechs, digital assets and their use, financial risk management and assessment report, analytical essay on financial P2P, B2B strategies. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive final written exam consisting of theoretical questions and practical financial problem-solving tasks (e.g., calculating spreadsheets in a digital system, new forms of financial intermediation, use of fintechs, stock markets, blockchain technologies, e-commerce services, cryptocurrency and bitcoin exchanges). It is designed to assess students' mastery of the principles of personal digital finance, quantitative decision-making skills, and ability to navigate digital financial ecosystems. Successful completion and submission of all assigned independent learning tasks is a prerequisite for passing the final exam. Grading criteria and assessment scale: |

| Module objective         | The primary objective of the Corporate finance module is to equip future highly qualified economists with a systematic understanding of financial decision-making and capital optimization within corporate structures. The course focuses on developing foundational and advanced skills in utilizing the time value of money, evaluating internal and debt-based financing sources, and determining optimal capital structures. Students will master the methodologies for assessing investment projects using net present value frameworks, balancing corporate risk and profitability, and executing strategic financial actions such as dividend distribution, tax planning, and corporate mergers and acquisitions. Ultimately, this module prepares students to act as strategic financial managers capable of navigating the financial markets and driving long-term corporate value maximization. |
| Module Learning Outcomes | Knowledge:LO1. Explain the core functions of a financial manager, the organization of corporate finance, and the interaction between corporations and financial markets.LO2. Apply the concept of the time value of money (TVM) to evaluate cash flows, determine interest rates, and value corporate options and securities.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |

The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short in-class quizzes, and the evaluation of structured independent study projects. Key projects include comparative empirical studies of direct and indirect taxation, tax burden impact reports on business sectors, analytical essays on corporate profit tax versus turnover tax options for small businesses, case studies on VAT invoice credit mechanisms, and research presentations on fiscal policy reforms in Uzbekistan. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive final written examination consisting of theoretical questions and practical tax problem-solving tasks (e.g., calculating corporate profit tax liabilities, value-added tax offsets, personal income tax withholdings, property and land tax calculations, and social tax contributions). It is designed to evaluate students' mastery of tax legislation, quantitative tax calculation skills, and ability to navigate digital tax administration platforms. Successful completion and submission of all assigned independent study tasks is a mandatory prerequisite for taking the final exam. Grading criteria and assessment scale:Student academic achievement is evaluated based on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: Excellent (90–100 points / Grade 5): The student demonstrates a comprehensive, deep understanding of tax principles and national tax legislation, maintains flawless scientific and logical rigor without conceptual errors, demonstrates independent analytical thinking, fully masters relevant tax laws and regulatory legal documents, accurately completes all |

| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight:Student performance is assessed through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final written examination (50%).The continuous assessment (20%) evaluates active classroom participation, practical lesson exercise performance, seminar discussions, and the successful completion of foundational independent study assignments. This includes the globalization of international financial relations, analyzing financial centers and markets, as well as guidelines for attracting international credit and investments.The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short in-class quizzes, and the evaluation of structured independent study projects. It involves writing an analytical essay on the practical application of international settlements to major projects, preparing reports on the structure of the balance of payments, and dealing with the activities and strategies of international financial organizations.The final assessment (50%) consists of a written exam with theoretical questions and tasks for solving practical financial problems (for example, calculating currency risks, accounting for allocated international loans, and determining income from attracted investments). This is designed for students, and it shows their ability to understand the principles of international finance, the workings of |

| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student learning is assessed through tests, oral work, and written work. In line with the standard structure, performance is evaluated through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final examination (50%). The continuous assessment evaluates active participation in lectures and practical lessons, seminar discussions, and the completion of independent work such as essays, glossaries, case assignments, infographics, and multimedia presentations on the topics of the course. The midterm assessment consists of written and oral tests together with the evaluation of structured independent study projects. The final examination is a comprehensive test of the theoretical and practical mastery of the course, covering the essence, functions and system of public finance, public financial policy and management, the state budget and the budget process, state targeted and extra-budgetary funds, state credit and public debt, local finance, and the role of public finance in economic and social development. Successful completion of all assigned independent study tasks is a prerequisite for taking the final examination. Grading criteria and assessment scale: |

This includes studying the execution of the state budget, its legal basis, financing of budget organizations, and the structure of the expenditure estimate. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short in-class quizzes, and the evaluation of structured independent study projects. This includes the revenues and expenses of the budget system, the distribution of legal and financial obligations within the system, the implementation of local budgets, the procedure for organizing public procurement, and the unified treasury information system. The final assessment (50%) consists of a written exam with theoretical questions and practical tasks (for example, preparing a cost estimate, accounting for off-budget funds, analyzing accounts of targeted and budgetary funds). This is designed to assess students' understanding of the principles of the budget system, their skills in managing the state treasury, and their ability to oversee government purchases through the digital finance system. Successfully completing and submitting all independent study tasks is a mandatory requirement for taking the final exam. Grading criteria and assessment scale:Student academic achievement is evaluated based on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: Excellent (90–100 points / Grade 5): The student has a full, deep understanding of the budget system and ministry principles, maintains strong scientific and logical rigor, shows independent analytical thinking, knows the relevant financial laws and rules well, completes all independent tasks accurately, and |

| Module objective         | The objective of the Financial Technologies module is to provide an in-depth understanding of the digital transformations occurring in banking and nonbanking services, enabling students to evaluate how traditional financial institutions adapt to technological competition and FinTech ecosystem developments.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
| Module Learning Outcomes | Knowledge:LO1. Explain the differences between FinTech and TechFin, along with the fundamentals of cryptography, encryption, and digital signatures.LO2. Describe the architecture of blockchain technology, including Bitcoin, Ethereum, DApps, Smart Contracts, and Decentralized Finance (DeFi).Skills:LO3. Analyze the application of Big Data, Artificial Intelligence (AI), and Machine Learning algorithms in optimizing the financial sector.LO4. Evaluate Natural Language Processing (NLP) tools and Robo-advisors to make data-driven investment decisions.Competencies:LO5. Develop strategic models for new financial technology projects in banking, digital wealth management, InsureTech, and RegTech, ensuring regulatory compliance. |

|  | L2. Information Security in Financial Systems: Explores the critical aspects of protecting financial data, focusing on the theoretical foundations of cryptography, modern encryption methods, and the application of digital signatures in securing digital transactions. L3. Fundamentals of Blockchain Technology: Introduces the underlying architecture of distributed ledger technology, discussing its core principles, consensus mechanisms, and the foundational structure of networks such as Bitcoin. L4. Smart Contracts and the Ethereum Network: Focuses on the functionality and deployment of self-executing contracts, examining the Ethereum blockchain ecosystem and the logic behind Decentralized Applications (DApps). L5. Decentralized Finance (DeFi): Analyzes the architecture of DeFi protocols, exploring how traditional financial services like lending, borrowing, and trading are restructured on decentralized, intermediary-free platforms. L6. Big Data in Finance: Examines the role of massive datasets in the financial industry, highlighting techniques for data collection, storage architecture, and the utilization of alternative data for financial modeling. L7. Artificial Intelligence (AI) and Machine Learning in Finance: Discusses the application of AI and ML algorithms in optimizing financial services, including predictive analytics, automated risk management, and algorithmic customer service. L8. Artificial Neural Networks: Delves into the architecture, layers, and training methodologies of neural networks, demonstrating their specific applications in complex pattern recognition and financial market forecasting. |

| Teaching Methods     | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, practical exercises, independent analytical assignments, problem-solving tasks, case studies, and the use of modern FinTech applications. Interactive lectures establish foundational theoretical concepts through multimedia presentations and active, Q&A-driven discussions. Practical exercises and problem-solving tasks engage students in quantitative calculations, testing financial algorithms, and modeling digital transaction processes. Case studies focus on evaluating real-world FinTech business models, digital transformation strategies in commercial banking, and regulatory sandbox implementations. Furthermore, independent analytical assignments foster critical research skills through literature reviews, essay writing, and market analysis, while direct interaction with modern FinTech applications, blockchain explorers, and data analysis software builds essential practical competencies required in the contemporary financial sector. |

| Teaching Methods | The module employs a blended learning approach utilizing interactive academic lectures, quantitative risk modeling workshops (including software simulations), case-based learning focused on historical and modern financial crises, and independent, data-driven analytical projects. These methods emphasize critical thinking and real-world application of econometric techniques to evaluate financial distress.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |

| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student performance is assessed through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final written examination (50%). Continuous assessment (20%) assesses active participation in the lesson, completion of practical lesson exercises, seminar discussions, and successful completion of key independent learning tasks. These include continuous monitoring of adopted legislation, application of financial law provisions, and practical exercises on analyzing the accumulation, distribution, and use of funds. Interim assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short in-class quizzes and assessment of structured independent educational projects. The main projects include studying financial legal documents (Budget Code, Tax Code, "On Banks and Banking Activities", "On Insurance", "On Investments"), conducting an analytical analysis of the advantages and disadvantages of conducting business on the basis of legislation. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive final written exam consisting of theoretical questions and practical financial problem-solving tasks (e.g., calculating cash flow tables, insurance premium deductions, income allocation). It is designed to assess students' mastery of the principles of financial law, legal decision-making skills, and ability to navigate legal systems in financial systems. Successful completion and submission of all assigned independent study assignments is a prerequisite for passing the final exam. Grading criteria and assessment scale: |

| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student learning is assessed through tests, oral work, and written work. In line with the standard structure, performance is evaluated through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final examination (50%). The continuous assessment evaluates active participation in lectures and practical lessons, seminar discussions, and the completion of independent work such as essays, glossaries, case assignments, infographics, and multimedia presentations on the topics of the course. The midterm assessment consists of written and oral tests together with the evaluation of structured independent study projects. The final examination is a comprehensive test of the theoretical and practical mastery of the course, covering the essence, functions and theories of money, money turnover and the money supply, the monetary system of Uzbekistan, inflation and monetary reforms, credit and its forms, the banking system and the Central Bank, commercial banks, and non-bank and international financial institutions. Successful completion of all assigned independent study tasks is a prerequisite for taking the final examination. Grading criteria and assessment scale: Student academic achievement is evaluated on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: |

|  | The continuous assessment (20%) assesses students' active participation in the learning process, logical and critical thinking skills, ability to conduct applied research, and successful completion of independent learning assignments. These assignments include: preparing business plans, analyzing business financing alternatives, calculating the cost of capital and key financial indicators, evaluating investment projects using financial decision-making methods, assessing working capital and cash flow management, analyzing business risks and financing strategies, and developing practical recommendations to improve the financial performance, sustainability, and long-term growth of business enterprises. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theory tests, short analytical assignments, and structured independent research projects. Key projects include creating a financial plan for a small business, analyzing the income and expenses of the enterprise, calculating the break-even point, comparing loan or investment options, creating a cash flow plan, analyzing the financial performance of the enterprise, identifying sources of financing for the selected business idea, analyzing the financial problem according to the business case, and proposing practical solutions. The final assessment (50%) consists of a comprehensive written exam covering fundamental theoretical concepts in business finance and solving complex practical problems (calculating the initial investment of a business, calculating income, expenses and net profit, calculating the break-even point, preparing a cash flow statement, calculating the payback period of an investment project). Students' ability to make decisions regarding business financing, draw up a business plan, effectively |

Students are expected to identify Shariah requirements, distinguish permissible and prohibited transactions, and demonstrate accurate use of core Islamic finance terminology. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical questions, analytical quizzes, and a structured project or presentation. Typical tasks include comparing Islamic and conventional financing, analyzing a selected contract, calculating profit-sharing or sale-based returns, evaluating Shariah-compliance risks, and presenting evidence-based conclusions. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive written examination combining theoretical concepts with practical problem-solving. It may include the design and evaluation of Mudarabah, Musharakah, Murabaha, Salam, Istisna, Ijarah, Takaful, equity, and Sukuk transactions. Completion of the assigned independent work is a prerequisite for admission to the final examination. Grading criteria and assessment scale: Student academic achievement is evaluated on a 100-point scale: Excellent (90-100 points / Grade 5): The student demonstrates comprehensive and systematic knowledge of Islamic finance, uses scientific and logical reasoning, explains the theoretical and practical significance of the subject, completes independent work accurately, and solves complex Shariah-compliant financial cases independently. Good (70-89.9 points / Grade 4): The student understands the essential content and practical application of the subject, completes required tasks with no major conceptual or logical errors, and provides generally correct solutions to theoretical and practical questions. |

| Module objective         | The objective of Islamic insurance is to provide students with a comprehensive theoretical framework and practical understanding of the Islamic insurance (Takaful) ecosystem. The course aims to equip students with deep insights into the historical evolution, legal and Shari'ah foundations, operational models, and investment strategies of Takaful institutions. Furthermore, it focuses on developing analytical skills to evaluate pricing (tariff) policies, financial performance (income and expenses), marketing instruments, and current global market trends, while enabling students to critically analyze and propose solutions to contemporary challenges in implementing Islamic insurance activities. |

| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student performance is assessed through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final written examination (50%). The continuous assessment (20%) evaluates active classroom participation, economic reasoning during seminar discussions, practical case study performance, and the successful completion of foundational independent study assignments. These tasks include real-time tracking of Takaful market metrics, practical application of Shariah-compliant risk-sharing frameworks, calculation of Tabarru' contributions and fund liquidity ratios, analysis of Takaful operator financial statements, and practical identification of solvency and operational risk early-warning signals in participant funds. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short analytical quizzes, and the evaluation of structured independent research projects. Key projects include a comparative empirical analysis of Takaful business models (Wakala, Mudaraba, and Hybrid structures), a financial stress-testing report on Participant Takaful Fund (PTF) resilience under catastrophic loss shocks, a cost-benefit analysis of surplus distribution mechanisms versus conventional insurance profit retention, a risk assessment report on Shariah-compliant asset allocation (Sukuk and ethical equities), and an analytical essay on Shariah governance paradigms and ethical risk-sharing dynamics. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive written examination consisting of core theoretical concepts and complex practical problem-solving tasks (e.g., modeling actuarial contribution rates, calculating Wakala |

| Teaching Methods | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, practical exercises, independent analytical assignments, problem-solving tasks, case studies, group discussions, and the use of modern digital tools for financial reporting analysis. The teaching process combines traditional and innovative methods to ensure deep understanding of International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS). Lectures are conducted using multimedia presentations, real IFRS examples, and comparative analysis with national accounting standards. Practical lessons include hands-on preparation of financial statements according to specific IFRS, case studies on revenue recognition, asset impairment, consolidation, and lease accounting. Independent work focuses on analytical reports comparing IFRS with Uzbek national standards, transformation of financial statements, preparation of consolidated reports, and research on practical challenges of IFRS implementation in Uzbekistan. Problem-solving tasks and group discussions encourage critical thinking and application of IFRS requirements to real-world business scenarios. Special emphasis is placed on interdisciplinary approaches, integration of accounting software and digital tools, case studies from international companies, and alignment with global professional certification requirements (e.g., ACCA, DipIFR). |                      | The teaching process combines traditional and innovative methods to ensure deep understanding of financial security concepts. Lectures are conducted using multimedia presentations and real-time data analysis from national and international financial reports. Practical lessons include case studies on identifying threats to financial security, calculations of key security indicators, and simulation of risk scenarios at the state, regional, enterprise, and individual levels. Independent work focuses on analytical reports, comparative studies of financial security systems in different countries, preparation of presentations on anti-money laundering mechanisms, and development of recommendations for strengthening personal and corporate financial resilience using modern digital tools. Problem-solving tasks and group discussions encourage critical thinking and application of theoretical knowledge to current economic challenges in Uzbekistan and globally. Special emphasis is placed on interdisciplinary approaches, integration of FinTech and data analytics tools, and alignment with international standards for financial stability and security. |

These include analysis of financial security indicators, case studies on threats to the monetary and banking system, preparation of reports on regional financial security, practical identification of money laundering risks, and assessment of personal financial protection strategies. The midterm assessment (30%) consists of written theoretical tests, short in-class quizzes, and the evaluation of structured independent study projects. Key projects include a comparative empirical study of financial security systems in different countries, analysis of budget and tax system threats, a report on banking sector stability, an assessment of foreign economic activity risks, and an analytical essay on combating money laundering as a key factor in national financial security. The final assessment (50%) is a comprehensive final written examination consisting of theoretical questions and practical problem-solving tasks (e.g., calculating financial security indicators, analyzing debt sustainability, evaluating insurance market criteria, modeling scenarios of external threats, and developing recommendations for strengthening individual financial security). It is designed to evaluate students' mastery of financial security principles, quantitative analytical skills, and ability to apply knowledge to real-world economic challenges in Uzbekistan and globally. Successful completion and submission of all assigned independent study tasks is a mandatory prerequisite for taking the final exam. Grading criteria and assessment scale: |

| Teaching Methods     | The module is delivered through interactive lectures, practical classes, seminars, case studies, problem-based learning, project-based learning, and independent study. Students participate in practical exercises involving international payment systems, documentary credits, foreign exchange operations, SWIFT transactions, and international banking documentation. Teaching incorporates financial simulations, group projects, presentations, and the use of digital banking platforms and financial information systems. Independent learning includes research assignments, analytical reports, and case analysis. Throughout the module, students develop analytical thinking, professional communication, teamwork, ethical decision-making, and digital competencies required for international financial operations and cross-border transactions. |

| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student learning is assessed through tests, oral work, and written work. In line with the standard structure, performance is evaluated through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final examination (50%). The continuous assessment evaluates active participation in lectures and practical lessons, seminar discussions, and the completion of independent work such as essays, glossaries, case assignments, infographics, and multimedia presentations on the topics of the course. The midterm assessment consists of written and oral tests together with the evaluation of structured independent study projects. The final examination is a comprehensive test of the theoretical and practical mastery of the course, covering the essence and legal basis of public procurement, the models and forms of organizing procurement, the electronic-store, auction, competitive-bidding, tender and single-supplier procurement methods, the monitoring and control of procurement, combating corruption, and foreign countries' experience in managing public procurement systems. Successful completion of all assigned independent study tasks is a prerequisite for taking the final examination. Grading criteria and assessment scale: Student academic achievement is evaluated on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: Excellent (90–100 points / Grade 5): The student can fully explain the essence and content of the subject, maintains scientific rigor and logic while avoiding errors and confusion, |

| Exams and Assessment | Type of examination (written, oral, project) and its weight: Student learning is assessed through tests, oral work, and written work. In line with the standard structure, performance is evaluated through continuous assessment (20%), midterm assessment (30%), and a final examination (50%). The continuous assessment evaluates active participation in lectures and practical lessons, seminar discussions, and the completion of independent work such as essays, glossaries, case assignments, infographics, and multimedia presentations on the topics of the course. The midterm assessment consists of written and oral tests together with the evaluation of structured independent study projects. The final examination is a comprehensive test of the theoretical and practical mastery of the course, covering the fundamentals, forms and methods of financial control, the national control bodies and the Accounts Chamber of the Republic of Uzbekistan, control in the tax, customs, banking and insurance sectors, control over the drafting and execution of the budget, control over the activity of budget organizations, and the role of audit control. Successful completion of all assigned independent study tasks is a prerequisite for taking the final examination. Grading criteria and assessment scale: Student academic achievement is evaluated on a 100-point grading scale mapped to standard performance criteria: Excellent (90–100 points / Grade 5): The student can fully explain the essence and content of the subject, maintains scientific rigor and logic while avoiding errors and confusion, has a clear understanding of the theoretical and |
